Ariel Brown: Valedictorian Niki Kidd : Salutatorian

By Niki Kidd

On the day that the Valedictorian and Salutatorian were announced, many students rushed up to Ariel Brown to congratulate her on her accomplishment.

Problem was, they were all congratulating the wrong person.

That day just happened to be the same day that she and her identical twin sister,

Ariel Brown

Zoe, decided to switch places in their classes and each pose as the other one.

So when everyone was trying to congratulate Ariel, they were actually talking to Zoe.

Now, in this issue of the Pony Express, it's time to give Ariel credit for having the highest grades in the Class of 2003.

Ariel has always been an outstanding student, but her conscientious and hardworking behavior was never more evident than in high school. Her 4.2 cumulative GPA led her classmates, thanks to her rigorous schedule including every AP and honors class offered at San Marin.

"It's an honor to be named Valedictorian, although it was never a big deal for me. I just worked as hard as I could and I tried to do my best; I wasn't trying to be Valedictorian," Ariel said.

If her schedule wasn't already packed with schoolwork, it was when her extra curricular activities are taken into account. She is a lifetime member of CSF, a four-year member of San Marin's Art club, a member of the Second Chance Rescue club that was at San Marin, a tutor in Spanish, piano player for 11 years, a four-year varsity track athlete and a three-year varsity cross-country runner.

In this day and age of excessive parental involvement in school work for students, Ariel insists that she "Didn't have much pressure from her parents in terms of grades, they just always supported her and let her do what she wanted." Just another affirmation of what an amazing and hard-working this young lady is.

Ariel will be moving on to UCLA in the fall, where her major is undecided, but as long as she continues her hard work and dedication, her success won't be.

by Rebecca Guthrie

The first words that come to mind when describing Niki Kidd are well rounded. This girl not only plays on varsity sports year round; she also has time to bring her cumulative GPA to a 4.2, making her the class of 2003's Salutatorian.

This female sports and news editor of the Pony Express seems to be quite on top of things. She has played golf, soccer, and basketball year round for San Marin as well as earned the title of "Most Spirited" in the senior class (always wearing her senior shirt every Friday). She will be attending the prestigious UCLA in the fall with a major in pre-history. Her real passion and, hopefully, future major is communications. "I'd like to eventually go into radio and television broadcasting," says Kidd. Some of you may have even noticed her sporting around a video camera at school events and during classes. She is in the process of creating a senior movie that highlights all the events that she and her friends have experienced this past year.

However, she still takes her school work very seriously, oftentimes getting her work done far in advance, usually due to a sports practice, movie editing, or (her secret indulgence) reality TV!! "My only B came last year from Mr. Zechlin's precalculus class." Upon further inquiry, Kidd states, "No comment. Just kidding, it wasn't his fault at all. I didn't do as well as I should have. However, I did get an A in calculus both semesters." How's that for a comeback?

Niki says her favorite San Marin memory was last year when the girls varsity soccer team beat Marin Catholic in the MCAL playoffs. "It is a memory that makes me feel all fuzzy inside. We were the underdogs and they were the undefeated

What Comes Next?

By Niki Kidd

One last article. One last chance to impart knowledge upon the readers of the Pony Express. One last time to reminisce about my time spent here at San Marin. What these sentence fragments all add up to is the sum total of my departing piece as I leave San Marin and the Pony Express staff.

It is tradition for the departing Pony Express editors to write a final article in the June edition of the paper that reminisces about their four years at San Marin. They pour their hearts out onto the page in an effort to impart one lasting message or show their true happiness to be getting out of Novato.

Now this may just seem very extreme, but my love of sports and my love of journalism has somewhat dictated the courses I have taken in life. And the only thing that really worries me now is the fact that some other odd little child could be going through the same experiences that I did, but not have a journalism class in the whole city of Novato to use as an outlet.

Much has been said, especially at board meetings, on the subject of the importance of journalism. I could just repeat what has been said there, but I'd rather elaborate on its importance to me.

It has helped me realize what I want to do for the rest of my life, it has been an outlet for my frustrations and my happiness, and it has been place that has brought me relaxation and unnering stress. It has been part of the realization of a lifelong dream of mine, and without it, I wouldn't be the same person.

So what comes next? What if there is no more Pony Express at San Marin? How will kids with strange dreams of living in Bristol, Connecticut working the 1 am Sportscenter learn about journalism? Not when they're in college, because they would be so far behind the other students there that have a steady background in journalism thanks to their high school experiences that they couldn't keep up.

What often gets lost in the shuffle of elementary school kids begging for their P.E. teacher's jobs and music kids tooting their own horns is the fact that these high school electives help build futures more than a lot of the classes being cut. Or in my case, help me attain my dream for my future. Without journalism, drama, leadership, and so on, younger kids will never know how these subjects could truly change their lives.

Hopefully, though, the newspaper will return over the summer. Hopefully, future seniors will look back at this newspaper and say, "Wow, she wasted her last shot at leaving a lasting impression because journalism never left."

I can only dream.

Without journalism, drama, leadership, and so on, younger kids will never know how these subjects could truly change their lives.

No matter which angle they take, their words will live on as the paper is recirculated for future departing seniors to know what they should write in their senior paper. Unfortunately, future seniors might not use my final words for reference if journalism remains on the chopping block as is planned this summer.

Ever since I was a little girl, something about journalism, newspapers, and television has intrigued me. I used to play baseball games on my Sega Genesis, run down the hall to the computer, and type up fake sports stories about my accomplishments, complete with made up interviews and stats.

In the fourth grade, one of our assignments was to draw a picture that depicted what you wanted to be when you grew up. Most people drew Olympic rings, teacher's desks, and veterinarians. I drew myself as an ESPN Sportscenter anchorwoman.

The Good Stuff, the Dumb Stuff, and the Stuff You'd Like to Forget

By Mike Gutierrez and Mark Kellner

Throughout our times at San Marin each and every one of us has done different things for enjoyment. While some of us didn't venture far from our comfort zones, others jumped out of the box. Either way, all of us seniors experienced fun times, good times, and embarrassing times.

First off, school is only a small fraction of the changes we go through, which explains why we're going to talk about the good stuff, the "extracurricular activities."

Weekends at San Marin ranged from movies, to sports events, to late night fast-food-fests, to bowling, to delinquent behavior, and, of course, raging parties. We're going to list just some of these events for you first-hand.

◆ It was an "A" watch night, and the party decided to go for a swim. However, not too many people were willing to swim.

◆ An individual trying to make haste getting home in the middle of the night decided to cross a creek, except he forgot about the 12-foot drop. He continued to run, but this time tried to hop an electric fence and didn't figure it out until he said he thought "a bug was biting him."

◆ It was a gathering on San Carlos and liquid began to mysteriously leak from a light above. However, it wasn't until an individual from '04, who tried to fix the problem that party was brought to an abrupt end. The table flip over and beverages flew everywhere. Let's just say the owner wasn't too happy.

◆ Poison oak is bad enough, but only one member of the '03 class knows what it's like to scrub permanent marker off the rash.

◆ This person from 03 kicked over a barbecue and almost ignited a brush fire in a garden.

◆ While law enforcement doesn't look like much of a future for this 03 individual, he still managed to kick down his own bathroom door.

◆ Haru—a great dinning spot for '03.

Well, this is it '03. Good luck in the future, but don't forget the many great times we shared. We must say San Marin's been fun.

Thinking Out Loud

By Susan Beresford and Bret Pughe

We wanted to say something funny. We wanted to say something that everyone could relate to. Most importantly, we wanted to say something memorable. However, we struggled to fit all of these aspects into one article. Throughout our four years at San Marin, many of us have had boyfriends, girlfriends, significant others and whatnot. For some of us, these high school relationships have endured, for others they haven't. No matter what the situation and whether we realize it or not, we've all learned from these relationships and experienced many new things.

Our first idea was to write about high school relationships in general, what goes on, typical encounters, etc. However, this topic was too boring and went nowhere fast. We were struggling to make this story funny, but sometimes you have to realize that funny just comes. Next we opted for the more personal touch, thinking we'd talk about our relationship, but that was a bit more than either of us would have liked to share.

Then we figured a he says/she says column could do the trick, setting up hypothetical situations and what a boyfriend/girlfriend would do in each. Thinking up the questions was the hard part, and once we started brainstorming the questions weren't hypothetical anymore. Then we realized that neither of us really wanted to hear the answers. So we were right back to square one: not funny and too personal—a lot like high school relationships.

So, we've given you the background about the trials and tribulations of writing this article. But where are we going with this? This is not only a tough question we face as journalists, but it is a challenging question for high school kids in relationships as well. Where is your relationship going?

Very few of us, if any, will grow up and marry our high school boyfriends/girlfriends. High school, for many, is a time to go out and party with good friends. This often results in a lack of "quality time" with the boyfriend/girlfriend.

Many relationships turn into group dating; a big group of guys and girls go out together, and some are more affectionate towards each other than others. Dinner and a movie, for example, on a weekend night are hard to come by in a relationship between teens. So although we cannot speak on behalf of every relationship, if you're going to frequently visit your significant other, your relationship is definitely going to take work.

As we're sure you've heard in English an uncountable number of times, writing is a process. Well, journalism is no thematic essay, but it's writing and it's still a process. High school relationships, however, have nothing whatsoever to do with writing. (Unless you write each other love letters and exchange them during passing periods, but we won't go there) But yep, you guessed it. These wonderful, rewarding relationships are also a process.

Boy meets girl. Boy thinks girl is hot. Girl thinks boy is hot. They happen to have everything in common, and yes, even though opposites do attract, boy and girl complete each other. (Compliments to Jerry Maguire.) Boy and girl grow up, get married, make beautiful babies, and live happily ever after. Well, not quite.

This is not the type of process we were referring to, but hey, we got carried away. Which brings us to our final point: we often get carried away in our relationships.

New Administration– After several years of turmoil and turnover, former Redwood High School principal Greg Duffy ruled over San Marin students with an iron fist.

Never Forgotten– Praised English teacher Paul Ferreboeuf is killed in a tragic automobile accident and leaves a permanent wound in the hearts of San Marin students and staff.

A Day of Tears and Fears– For two days, the class of '03 endured an emotional onslaught of healing from the proud producers of Challenge Day.

Dirt Parking lot paved– No more muddy donuts on a rainy day.

Rumors!– Many students opt out of a spring day at San Marin after hearing of a possible gun threat to occur on campus.

Field Study– Say no more!

It's raining, it's snowing?– On a lovely January morning, the hills of Mt. Burdell were surprisingly dusted with a loovely covering of snow.

A great teacher– Famed Sinaloa history buff Sandy Mclsaac dies of a stroke.

2001 Champs– The San Marin varsity football team goes undefeated (first in SM history) and wins the MCAL and NCS championships.

Congresswoman comes to town– Representative Lynn Woolsey makes an appearance in the Hank Horoski Gym to congratulate SM students on their practice of tolerance.

Up from the Ashes– San Marin academy students welcome their new building and hub for the school year.

What the?– Calculus students arrive at school in the beginning of the year to see that famed math teacher Terry McBroom shaved his moustache.

Every 15 Minutes– Students are shown the harsh reality of drinking and driving.

Who's that lady?– Loeta Andersen becomes San Marin's interim principal for the 2002–2003 school year.

No Money...– The Novato Unified School District Board announce a possible budget deficit of 3.8 million dollars resulting in possible loss of jobs and classes. Additional repercussions are yet to come.

— The Year in Sports —

By Niki Kidd

This sports year has seen its share of ups and downs for San Marin athletes, but sadly for all the Mustangs out there, more downs.

try team finished with a 7-2 record, but it was the boys' team that managed to gain more publicity. Lacking the members to qualify as an

But any spirit that the fans had coming into the season was squelched by an early season controversy. On that fateful day of the first MCAL home game for San Marin, administration members prohibited the student section from standing for the duration of the game. This action caused an outrage among the student body that ultimately led to a smaller attendance throughout the season.

On the night that the boys' team always packs the bleachers, the girls' varsity basketball team kept the fans glued to their seats. Locked in an amazing double overtime battle against cross-town rivals, Novato, the girls played to a packed house and did not disappoint. During a time-out in double overtime, there was actually a cheer for San Marin coming from the student section, one of the few times that occurred all season long. Yet, despite the newfound support, the Mustangs came up just short in the game, and fell just short of the playoffs in the season as a whole.

A devastating knee-injury that would have been season ending only added fuel to the first of senior Bret Pughe's determination to do what has not been done in San Marin history. By making a triumphant return in the MCAL championships, Pughe won his fourth straight individual MCAL championship, becoming on the fourth person in MCAL history to do so.

official team, the boys' squad, comprised of Dan Byers, Ryan Pedigo, and Roger Klein, nonetheless came out and competed in every race despite no chance of winning. This show of dedication and determination inspired many athletes around the school, and around the county, and earned the boys much respect even without a single MCAL victory.

And then there was the boys' varsity water polo team. One year after winning the first game in the

Not a single varsity squad landed an MCAL pennant until the spring season, shattering the hopes and dreams of many seniors trying to take advantage of their last shot at the title.

One team that has had its share of success in recent years is the varsity football team. Coming off of a 10-0 MCAL season last year and matching MCAL and NCS championship banners, expectations were high for the Mustangs to repeat. Yet this season saw the team not only lose for the first time under head coach Chris Augusto, but also come up just short of repeating as MCAL and NCS champions. Their loss in the championship game against Novato will be motivation enough for the Mustangs to strive for perfection next season. The gallant efforts of seniors David Hoytt, who came back after a shoulder injury to play in the NCS championship game, Erik Egide, the workhorse running back that carried the team, and Jack Rolovich, the star-quarterback going on to play college football at Hawaii, will all be missed next season.

The girls' varsity cross-coun-program's history, the Mustangs went on a rampage this season, making the playoffs and showing why San Marin shouldn't be overlooked in the pool anymore. Despite losing in the playoffs, the season as a whole was a success considering the 6-4 season record, the first winning season for water polo in the history of San Marin.

The beginning of the winter sports season saw the return of the basketball fever at San Marin. The girls' varsity squad was very young, but very enthusiastic about the upcoming season, and the boys' team was poised for success with a new head coach and a new attitude.

By graduating, the wrestling squad not only loses a great competitor, but a great inspiration for all athletes.

As winter melted into spring, the San Marin community was sure that a MCAL championship was in the cards.

The opponents of the girls' varsity softball team saw a lot of goose eggs for much of the season. Sophomore pitcher Lyndsey Benson frustrated opponents and kept a scoreless streak that lasted through most of the season, a combination of both great pitching and great defense. Unfortunately for the girls, the streak couldn't last, and the girls fell just short of the MCAL tournament championship.

Just one year after the girls' golf team debuted at San Marin, the girls' lacrosse team made their triumphant debut this spring. Despite being composed of a team of mostly beginning players, the Mustangs were one of the most feared teams in MCAL. Senior Kim Larkey led the Mustangs to the co-championship banner, the first for San Marin in the 2002-2003 school year. This team only has a bright future in front of it, as they hope to start a new tradition of girls' lacrosse dominance at San Marin.

As another year comes and goes, one thing remains constant: the hard work, effort, and tenacity of San Marin athletes. Throughout the history of San Marin, sports teams have fought hard on the playing fields, representing their school, their fellow teammates, and themselves with the utmost dignity and respect, and this year was no different. With the end of the year comes new beginnings, and new hopes for next year from the returning seniors, only the memories remain from the high school athletic performances, and, hopefully, they will cherish them for years to come.

ATHLETE OF THE YEAR

By Niki Kidd

A killer tan, buffed up upper arms, and pruned fingers are what most people get out of swimming. But not Emily Parker. Swimming has given her so much more. Because of her talents and exploits in the pool, as well as the classroom, Parker will swim competitively for San Diego State this fall on a partial scholarship, joining an elite set of San Marin students to compete at the collegiate level. And because of her talents in the pool, Parker is this year's Pony Express athlete of the year.

Parker is the holder of two MCAL swimming records for the 500 freestyle, one the MCAL meet record of 5:02:22 and the other the MCAL league record of 5:00:97, both set her junior year. But don't think that her junior year was enough of an accomplishment for her. Parker went the entire senior year without a single defeat, and for the fourth year in a row, she won the 500 and 200 freestyle at the MCAL meet, as well as the 200 medley. In her 500 freestyle victory, she beat the next best swimmer by over nineteen seconds.

"The win in the 200 medley is by far the best moment of the season. Kayla Schott-Bressler, Ashley Karrell, Sarah Cochrane and I all swam great, it was awesome," Parker said, giving much of the credit for the victory on her relay mates. The team captain and co-MVP led the team to a strong season performance which included several losses by less than five points, a close margin considering the amount of points involved in a swim meet.

Not only did Parker kill the competition in swimming, but she was also an integral part to the rejuvenation of the San Marin water polo program. Her MVP performance this season included a second team all MCAL selection for the senior captain. "Water polo was a lot of fun and I'll really miss it next year when I'm focusing all of my energy just on swimming."

The three-time swim team MVP will be greatly missed next season as her consistent first place finishes in her events helped propel the Mustangs to dominance in the pool. "I'll miss San Marin and I'll always remember the memories from the past four years. But I'm ready to move on to bigger and better things."

Mustang fans come out for football.
